ABSTRACT

The publication of Medias such as printed matter, radio, television, internet or other kinds of media on domestic violence news in the way of harming the victims which most of them are the young people and woman should be charged by law. However, due to weak penalty of Domestic Violence Victim Protection Act, B.E.2550, medias are not apprehensive and do not venerate the laws. This study is aimed at analyzing the loophole of laws and conducting the comparative study on forms and measures of Thai and foreign laws.

The analysis result shows that the Medias' publication on domestic violence news can violate individual rights and freedom of the victim. Because of weak provisions of law, no compulsory measure against such violating publication of Medias shall be applied to make the Medias revere and lessen such violating publication.

To protect the rights of the victim, it is highly necessary that the government should organize an institute in charge of aiding the victim from such violating publication, and enforce laws to increase the penalty code against the offending Medias.
